Chapter i., 18.--Then after three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days. Chapter ii., i.--Then fourteen years after I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and took Titus also with me. TAKING these verses as finger-posts to indicate the subject for our consideration, I will endeavour to explain the facts which St. Paul mentions in these two chapters, and point out the great doctrine which he was anxious to teach the Galatians, as well as all mankind. Immediately after his conversion and baptism St. Paul preached the gospel to the people of Damascus, and, knowing as we do that his natural and spiritual gifts were great, we can have no difficulty in believing that he must have proclaimed Christ s truth to the unbelievers there with great force and fervour. But the greater his force and fervour, the greater the opposition which he met with among the people, especially the Jews, who conspired together to give themselves no rest until they were able to kill him. How short-sighted they must have been we can well imagine; for could they have put a stop to the preaching of the gospel by simply taking away the life of Paul? Were there no other preachers? or could not God have raised up another Paul? Those who suppose that, by means of violence or murder, they could gain their object, simply deceive themselves....
