Not illustrated. 1907 Excerpt: . . . terebeniene, and this name may be conveniently employed to designate the pinene of French turpentine oil. This variety of pinene is laevo-rotatory, while the pinene from American oil usually exhibits dextro-rotation. This difference in optical properties extends to the various compounds and polymers of the pinenes from French and American turpentine oils. Where two physical isomerides of a substance exist, the optical activities of the two varieties are usually equal and opposite. The specific rotation commonly assigned to lsevo-pinene is--40. 4 (--43. 4 being the greatest activity observed), while pinene from American oil of turpentine is stated to have a specific rotatory power of 21. 5 for the sodium ray. From these figures it would appear that one or other of the pinenes is not a homogeneous substance. J. H. Long has proved this to be the fact with respect to the product from American turpentine oil, which is a very variable mixture of dextro-and lsevo-pinene, in which the former variety usually predominates, though occasionally the leevo-pinene is in excess. By carefully selecting the crude turpentines, Long obtained from the spruce-pine a lsevo-pinene having a specific rotatory power of--40. 1 to--42. 5. As the separation of the two varieties of pinene by fractional distillation is impossible, the method commonly employed to obtain dextro-pinene from American turpentine oil is fallacious. In addition to forming the main portion of French oil of turpentine, lcevo-pinene occurs in the oils from Pinus picea and P. sylvestris, together with lsevo-limonene and...
