The writer of this has stood for hours at a time, closely watching the countenances of the throngs of visitors who came to gaze at the mementoes of the Revolution. They are all collected in the two rooms, respectively situated to the east and west of the main entrance to the building. The eastern apartment is the one where the first Colonial Congress assembled to debate and decide the question of our national freedom, where Jefferson and Franklin and their illustrious compeers weighed and measured the tremendous struggle which was about to be inaugurated. In this room are collected the identical chairs, tables and other pieces of furniture which were used there in 1776. Around the walls are suspended portraits of the statesmen and soldiers who took part in the Revolution. Upon the south side stands a large fireproof safe, in which is deposited the original Declaration of Independence, and also the silver inkstand used at the time of the signing.
