

Electronic Stalking in America: Nightmares of Conformity in America's Dreams of Independence. (Paperback)

By Jr John Longenecker

Contrast Media Press, United States, 2008. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .In 1973, the United States Patent Office granted patent number 3,713,148 to Mario Cardullo for a tiny passive transponder non-volatile in memory and operated remotely. Several RFID patents have been granted since. Electronic Stalking is aptly named, and the subtitle a frightening warning. Domestic Stealth Surveillance of Americans is a growth industry, and irrespective of announced intentions and assurances, the results will be tormenting as immense databases emerge as the last word in evidence, references, profiling, and as predictors against the word of the Citizen. The nightmare is not in finding out who you are, whole industries already know that, cites author John Longenecker, It's in who you must become in pressures to conform, or otherwise be labeled anti-social, bigoted, isolationist, or even dangerous. The danger is in new public/private partnerships of increasing mandated conformity in America allegedly against Crime and Violence. Longenecker asks: Is this where crime is fought? Why will inaccused citizens need permission to buy food or fuel? Longenecker sees a new political formula: Describe a Crisis, freeze citizens out of reconciling the...
