The men stand in a line about 6 feet apart, and throw the earth from one to the other. If Sind were entirely dependent on Sindees for carrying out heavy work, very slow progress would be made; but fortunately numbers of Afghans come down for employment each cold season--say from November to April--and are capital workers, and use a spado and barrow well. From the other side of India, Cutchees como with carts; other tribes with bullocks and donkeys, to carry the earth in bags. For ordinary canal clearance the Sindee harees, or cultivators, have to be depended upon. They are independent and deceitful where work is concerned, and cheat in earthwork excavations; it takes a good deal of experience to detect their frauds. However, with a little tact they will, in an emergency, do work which no extra wages would induce them...
